Document Now Delivered

VILLA'S ANSWER ON WAY TO PRESIDENT

(By United Press)
Washington, August 16.—General Carranza will permit the delivery of the Pan-American peace appeal to his military and civil commanders. The American diplomatic agent Parker at Mexico City notified the state department to this effect today.
Further said that General Gonzales Carranza's commander in the capital, had even offered to facilitate delivery by furnishing safe conduct through the mountains. Nevertheless, there was some delay in the issuance of these safe conducts. Consequently, many Mexican leaders were still unserved with copies of the appeal. General Carranza and General Villa had received theirs, however. From these at least responses were expected.
Carranza's failure to hold up the note was considered a good sign.
General Villa's response, supposedly favorable, was supposed to be on its way to Washington. No confirmation was obtainable at the state department that General Calles, a Carranza commander in Sonora state, had already replied, leaving everything in the first chief's hands. It was stated that he sent his reply to Washington.

TAFT STANDS FOR PEACE BUT FOR PREPAREDNESS

St. Louis, August 15.—"I am in favor of peace, but I am not in favor of this foolish sense of security which has no foundation. It was concerning Mr. Huerta when I went out of office and I think that our country made a mistake in ousting Huerta." It was ex-president Taft who made the foregoing statement. He arrived here today to address the business men's league.

GETTING TOGETHER.

There are three essentials to business: Merchandise, people, money. Where you find them in greatest concentration you find business best. Where you find business best you find good newspapers to carry the message of your merchandise to the people who own the money. The three must get together, and they do it best through advertising.

GIVING ONE'S BEST.

The quiet assumption of The Daily Public Spirit that it is just as good a daily paper as Clearfield deserves would be amusing if it did not reflect so grossly upon the intelligence of the community. The Progress does not think that The Daily Public Spirit in any way reflects what is best in Clearfield, and does not believe the community thinks so.

In saying this, it does not necessarily follow that The Progress thinks it is as good a newspaper as the community deserves—far from it. We have this advantage, however: The Progress knows what an ideal newspaper is, and has the ideal constantly in mind. It strives earnestly to overcome obstacles which seem ever to stand in the way of the attainment of the ideal, and believes that its efforts are rewarded by the production of a newspaper that is steadily growing better.

The Progress goes to press every day of its life serene in the knowledge that within the limits of its resources and the capacity and ability of the men and women who make it, it has done its best to give the people of Clearfield a clean, newsy newspaper which it believes they appreciate. It has the additional comfort of knowing that abroad it is looked upon as the one daily newspaper of this town.

In the life of a newspaper, a span of three years means nothing. Yet, looking back upon the three short years of its existence, the Progress takes pardonable pride in the knowledge that it has elevated the tone of the newspapers of this community—has set standards of decency and honesty, and to the best of its ability lived up to the journalistic requirements of the newspaper of today.

The future is broad and full of promise. The Progress views it cheerfully. It has asked and will ask little, and will continue to give its best to the community which sustains its life.

A BILLION-BUSHEL YEAR.

The latest crop reports from the department of agriculture promise an even vaster food crop than previously predicted, although the earlier estimates indicated an almost unprecedented yield. This is the more gratifying in view of late reports of serious damage from continuing rains in some of the great agricultural districts.

On June 1 the wheat crop was estimated at a little under 950,000,000 bushels and on July 1 at 963,000,000 bushels. The estimate on August 1 rose to 966,000,000 bushels. We now have promise of not only of almost a billion bushels of wheat but of nearly three billion bushels of corn, a mighty crop greater by 250,000,000 bushels than the corn yield of last year. Although the acreage of corn planted this year is greater than ever before, the promised yield is not quite up to that of the record year of 1912, the cool damp weather of the past month throughout large areas having proved injurious. It is still hoped, however, that with a late fall a new record for this staple may yet be established this year.

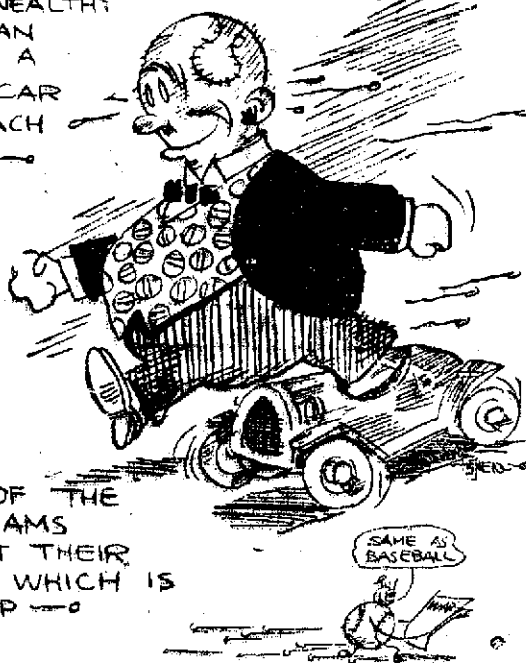

The outlook for the oat crop also has improved since July 1 and it is believed that, with favorable conditions, even the great record crop of 1912 will be exceeded. The present promise is nearly a billion and a half bushels, more than a quarter of a billion bushels greater than the crop of last year and but 16,000,000 below the highest record. Potatoes promise 431,000,000 bushels, 25,000,000 bushels more than last year, and 11,000,000 more than the yield in the great record year of 1912.

A heavy crop is reported from some of the wheat producing sections of Europe, but food production in that part of the world this year will be necessarily reduced and the demand for American food products can not fail to be unprecedented. This demand may lead to an unwelcome increase in prices at home, but the bringing of millions of dollars into this country in payment for exported food products will indirectly benefit our people generally.

The certainty of meeting Europe's needs as well as our own by means of vast American corn yields is an interesting reminder of how nature comes to the aid of man in times of stress. The fear of the failure of the world's food supply has often been expressed, but nature has never really been found wanting in the past and there is no good reason to expect disastrous shortage in the future. Nature is rich in undeveloped resources as well as in the fruits we have already learned to garner, and this richly productive earth of ours can be made to sustain many times the number of its present inhabitants. Local disturbances and temporary scarcity at points are inevitable, but with increasing intelligence and unabated industry, aided by developed methods of distribution, the generous soil of a world as yet only partly under cultivation can never fail to produce food in sufficient abundance.

Today's Geographic Study of The Great European War Zone

Vilna is one of the most important immediate objectives of the Teutonic drives in Russia, for its capture and retention by the Germans would not only threaten the communication of the Tsar's armies but would also cripple the second line of Russian defense, along the Dug, or the Brest-Litovsk line. The holding of Vilna would practically cut the northern communications of the powerful fortress and military entrepot upon the Bug, and bring with it a more startling change in the eastern campaign than even the capture of Warsaw. A description of this important railway, trading and manufacturing city is given in a statement on war geography issued today by the National Geographic Society. It reads:

"Vilna is a city of 170,000, an industrial and trade center situated in the midst of a region of tangled forests, almost impassable marshes, and low-lying lakes, at the intersection of the railways from Warsaw to Petrograd and from Libau, the Baltic port, to Rostof, at the mouth of the Don. It lies nearly mid-way between the cities of Grodno and Dvinsk, two other points upon the Warsaw-Petrograd Railway threatened by the German invaders. Petrograd lies 435 miles away to the north-northwest of Vilna, and the country in between is a labyrinth of lake, morass, woodland and wet meadowland. It is more than 110 miles from the German frontier, toward which it is guarded by the fortress of Kovno in the northwest.

"The city is an ancient one, of which fact its appearance bears every testimony, for its irregular ground-plan straggles among, around and over the knot of low hills upon which the city is built in accordance with the traditional silliness of the Middle Ages. Its streets are narrow, and not especially well-kept. It wears, however, a general air of comfortable prosperity; for Vilna sends large quantities of goods to the Black Sea and to the Baltic. It handles a very extensive business in grains and timber, articles which it exported before the present war in great quantities to Germany, to Holland, and to England. It also has important textile and leather industries. Vilna manufactures considerable tobacco, knit goods, clothing, artificial flowers and gloves.

"The old town is rich in memories. A mass of ruins that were once a brilliant castle of the Jagellons is here. Vilna was probably founded in the early part of the 10th century, but is first mentioned as the chief fortified town of the Lithuanians in 1128. It was the nucleus about which the great Lithuanian power grew, and a capital in which the ancient religious service was continued until the end of the 14th century. The God Perkunas housed here in a splendid temple and protected his people in their swamp and woodland until destroyed ruthlessly in 1387 by Prince Jagiello, after his conversion and baptism.

"Wars, plague and destructive fires have played havoc with the city's prosperity and growth. It was nearly ruined altogether in the 17th century, during the struggle between Russia and Poland. Russia finally took possession of the city in 1795, after Poland's partition. The Poles of Vilna aided the uprisings against their Russian overlords in 1831 and in 1863, and bitter punishment was administered for this by the Tsar's government. The native Russian element in the city is small. It is estimated that more than 50 per cent of the population is Jewish, while the Lithuanians and Poles make up the greatest part of the remainder."

PUBLIC MONEYS BY MAIL

Washington, Aug. 16.—Another blow to private enterprise and an indirect step in the administration's policy of controlling some public utilities was delivered today when the government put into effect its order that all public moneys and securities shall be transported by mail instead of by express.

The express companies, which have been handling the traffic more than a quarter of a century, with one nearly a half million a year, in making the change the government expects to eliminate many delays in addition to effecting a great economy.

Expert Advice For the Automobile Owner

Queries and Replies Covering Matters of Importance to the Man Who Runs a Car

Will you please advise me the best method of sinking a galvanized iron drum for the purpose of underground storage of gasoline?

The best method of sinking a galvanized iron drum for the purpose of underground storage of gasoline is to dig the well in which the tank is to be sunk with some hard material, such as brick or concrete, that will not sink unequally afterward and put strain upon the tank connections. There are many methods suggested by different companies in this business. One company states that the best method of sinking such a drum, both as regards the life of the drum and cheapness, is to paint the tank thoroughly with a good asphaltum paint or smear thoroughly with tar. After the hole for the tank is made put in this either a tanned paper or burlap, smearing the tank thoroughly with asphaltum or tar and then folding it over the burlap or tanned paper. The asphaltum or tar is again daubed over the tank after this is done, after which the ground is filled in, and, according to the estimate of this company, the tank should be good for fifty or a hundred years.

What is a good way to eliminate squeaking springs?

Wipe graphite introduced between the leaves of the springs kills the

squeak and seems to last indefinitely. The reason for its success is that it clings to the surface of the leaves and puts a veneer of graphite all over them. This prevents metal to metal contact.

The way to apply the lubricant is as follows: Jack up the car so that all weight is off the springs and spread the leaves apart with a screwdriver. Now dust the leaves as thoroughly as possible with fake graphite, using a feather. You will find when you come to drive your car, even over the roughest roads, that spring squeaking has all disappeared.

Is it practicable to use shellac on rims to prevent rusting?

If you painted your rims with shellac you would find that it peels off in a short time. For this purpose graphite paint or even ordinary paint would be much more satisfactory.

How can I retain the glossy finish on the body of my car?

Wash the body with slightly warm water and when dry give well rubbed in application of a liquid veneer with cheesecloth. As a result the body retains its gloss, although run practically every day in the year and in all kinds of weather.

WEDDING OF THE GERMAN CHANCELLOR'S DAUGHTER

Had it not been for the war which is engaging the German nation, the wedding of Fraulein Isa Von Bethmann-Hollweg, the daughter of the German Imperial Chancellor, to Count Von Zech-Burkersrode, would have been a grand court fete with all its attending pomp and ceremony. But in keeping with the serious affairs of the nation, the ceremony was marked by its simplicity. The photograph shows part of the crowd of women who stood behind the flower girls watching the German Chancellor's daughter walking down the flower strewn road with his daughter by his side. In the happiness of the moment, the grizzled old veterans forgot everything else but the big event, the wedding of his daughter to the man of her choice.

PROVIDENCE LEADS ENGLAND THROUGH MINING MUDDLE

Lloyd George's Organization of Mines Under Nation Saves England From Disorder

Industrial Paralysis and General Domestic Upheaval Everted by "Business Manager" of British Nation—Charged Lack of Patriotism Shown Not to be True.

BY ED. L. KEEN
(United Press Staff Correspondent)
London, August 2 (by mail).—Providence takes care of drunken men, babies, and—England.

According to some irreverent folks this amended version of the old adage is quite justified, especially in view of the timely settlement of the recent coal strike.

Anyhow, it is conceded on all hands over here that John Bull seldom did a more thorough job of "muddling through"—likewise is it admitted that in this particular instance Providence was materially assisted by one David Lloyd George, the new "business manager of the British Empire."

The censorship muddle, the recruiting muddle, the Dardanelles muddle, the shells muddle, the machine-gun muddle, the cabinet muddle, and all the other muddles, big and little in which Great Britain has been involved since the great war began—none of them contained such possibilities of widespread disaster as the coal strike muddle. Not only was England face to face with industrial paralysis and general domestic disorder, if not revolution; but she had already been unofficially reproved by her allies, who recently had been none too enthusiastic anyhow over the support she had been giving them on the battlefield. The great manufacturing establishments had begun to feel the pinch; a number of the coal-carrying roads had closed down; the admiralty had grabbed all the available coal supply of the South Wales docks; the increased flow of munitions which Lloyd George had just gotten well started was gravely jeopardized, and—perhaps more portentous than anything else—half a dozen French ships were lying in Cardiff harbor with empty bunkers.

For three months the situation had been developing. If John Bull had merely glanced in that direction he would have seen it; but John probably figured that he had quite enough trouble in stock without frisking the future for more. Hunting for trouble never was one of John's long suits.

The five year agreement of the South Wales Miners' federation with the Coal Owners' association was due to expire June 30. The men had given the required three months' notice that they desired a new deal. The masters refused to listen. The deadlock continued. And it was not until three days before the date of expiration of the old agreement that Walter Runciman, president of the government board of trade, whose most important duty is to prevent strikes if possible, intervened. Even he did not go South Wales to investigate conditions on the spot, or by personal influence among the men and masters to avert the disaster that was before the nation. He handled the matter at his desk in London. It was he, and he alone, who saved the situation.

He realized the determination of the men. Runciman framed an award which conceded most of the men's demands. But whereas this was satisfactory to the federation leaders, it was rejected by the rank and file. After keeping the men at work on day-to-day contracts for a fortnight, the leaders could go no further, and the strike was on.

Now, there has been a whole lot said about lack of patriotism on the part of the miners; but very little about the masters. The real reason for this strike was the question of war profits. With the cost of living increased by from 50 to 60 per cent, the miners felt that they were entitled to share in the enormous profits accruing to the coal owners by reason of the war. But even at that, when the trouble first started, the men said to the masters, in effect: "If you will sell coal at the old prices, we will go on working at the old wage. But if it is your purpose to make money out of the war, we see no reason why we should not share this profit with you. We object to having our patriotism capitalized for your benefit. Is it patriotic to go on increasing the price of coal, not only to our own people but also to our allies?"

Regardless of whether the miners were right or wrong in their attitude there is no question but what the owners had taken advantage of the war to line their pockets. Coal prices in London last winter averaged $2.25 per ton above normal; and the cheaper grades—which most of poor people buy—were in some instances as much as $2.75 higher than normally. Against this, place the fact that the miners' original demands in their entirety amounted to an increase of only 9 cents a ton on cost of production!

In answer to the charge of want of patriotism on their part the miners point out that nearly 100,000 men have been sent to the war from South Wales—56,000 from one county alone. President Winstone of Miners' federation has a son in the army; Treasurer Onions' eldest son was recently killed in action, and he has two other sons serving; three of Secretary Richards' sons are in the trenches; Executive Committee member Gill is a lieutenant in the army, and Watts Morgan, one of the most influential leaders in the district, is captain of a troop of Rhonda ex-miners.

The strike would still be on today—or there would have been nationalization of the mines—were it not for Lloyd George. When the minister of munitions went to South Wales he carried concealed weapons, but he didn't have to use them. His marvelous personal magnetism won the day with his fellow countrymen. It was some job, and it is exceedingly doubtful if any other man in England could have accomplished the result so satisfactorily, especially in view of the fierce resentment that had been aroused through the hasty application of the penalty clauses of the munitions act to the district. That the men got nearly all they asked for was due to Lloyd George's appreciation of the justice of their claim to a fair share of the war profits of the masters.

Carranza Offered No Objection to Note's Delivery to Chiefs

Administration Considers Attitude a Hopeful Sign--Vera Cruz Reports Document Now Delivered

VILLA'S ANSWER ON WAY TO PRESIDENT

(By United Press)
Washington, August 16.—General Carranza will permit the delivery of the Pan-American peace appeal to his military and civil commanders. The American diplomatic agent Parker at Mexico City notified the state department to this effect today.
Further said that General Gonzales Carranza's commander in the capital, had even offered to facilitate delivery by furnishing safe conduct through the mountains. Nevertheless, there was some delay in the issuance of these safe conducts. Consequently, many Mexican leaders were still unserved with copies of the appeal. General Carranza and General Villa had received theirs, however. From these at least responses were expected.
Carranza's failure to hold up the note was considered a good sign.
General Villa's response, supposedly favorable, was supposed to be on its way to Washington. No confirmation was obtainable at the state department that General Calles, a Carranza commander in Sonora state, had already replied, leaving everything in the first chief's hands. It was stated that he sent his reply to Washington.

TAFT STANDS FOR PEACE BUT FOR PREPAREDNESS

St. Louis, August 15.—"I am in favor of peace, but I am not in favor of this foolish sense of security which has no foundation. He arrived here today to address the business men's league.

There are three essentials to business: Merchandise, people, money. Where you find them in greatest concentration you find business best. Where you find business best you find good newspapers to carry the message of your merchandise to the people who own the money. The three must get together, and they do it best through advertising.

BRITISH LAND FORCES AND FIGHT WAY INTO TURKEY

New Artillery Breaks Down Turkish Trenches Along Saros Bay

(By United Press)
Athens, August 16.—British reinforcements landed last week near Suvla Bay, have fought their way southward on Gallipoli and effected a junction with the New Zealand troops near Gabutepe. Dispatches from Mitylene today state that the new British artillery broke down many rows of Turkish trenches along Saros Bay, the Turkish beating a hasty retreat.

BREK LITOVSK IS WITHIN THE GRASP OF VON MACKEN

Russian Fortress Presumably Surrounded, German Forces Steadily Closing

Many Russian Troops Surrendered to the German Forces—Barbarians Winning Splendid Aid.

(By United Press)
Berlin, Aug. 16.—Two Austrian man armies converged upon Brek Litovsk, are within less than a days march of the Russian fortress and are closing in for the attack upon the outer works. GIVING ONE'S BEST.

The quiet assumption of The Daily Public Spirit that it is just as good a daily paper as Clearfield deserves would be amusing if it did not reflect so grossly upon the intelligence of the community. The Progress does not think that The Daily Public Spirit in any way reflects what is best in Clearfield, and does not believe the community thinks so.

In saying this, it does not necessarily follow that The Progress thinks it is as good a newspaper as the community deserves—far from it. We have this advantage, however: The Progress knows what an ideal newspaper is, and has the ideal constantly in mind. It strives earnestly to overcome obstacles which seem ever to stand in the way of the attainment of the ideal, and believes that its efforts are rewarded by the production of a newspaper that is steadily growing better.

The Progress goes to press every day of its life serene in the knowledge that within the limits of its resources and the capacity and ability of the men and women who make it, it has done its best to give the people of Clearfield a clean, newsy newspaper which it believes they appreciate. It has the additional comfort of knowing that abroad it is looked upon as the one daily newspaper of this town.

In the life of a newspaper, a span of three years means nothing. Yet, looking back upon the three short years of its existence, the Progress takes pardonable pride in the knowledge that it has elevated the tone of the newspapers of this community—has set standards of decency and honesty, and to the best of its ability lived up to the journalistic requirements of the newspaper of today.

The future is broad and full of promise. The Progress views it cheerfully. It has asked and will ask little, and will continue to give its best to the community which sustains its life.

A BILLION-BUSHEL YEAR.

The latest crop reports from the department of agriculture promise an even vaster food crop than previously predicted, although the earlier estimates indicated an almost unprecedented yield. This is the more gratifying in view of late reports of serious damage from continuing rains in some of the great agricultural districts.

On June 1 the wheat crop was estimated at a little under 950,000,000 bushels and on July 1 at 963,000,000 bushels. The estimate on August 1 rose to 966,000,000 bushels. We now have promise of not only of almost a billion bushels of wheat but of nearly three billion bushels of corn, a mighty crop greater by 250,000,000 bushels than the corn yield of last year. Although the acreage of corn planted this year is greater than ever before, the promised yield is not quite up to that of the record year of 1912, the cool damp weather of the past month throughout large areas having proved injurious. It is still hoped, however, that with a late fall a new record for this staple may yet be established this year.

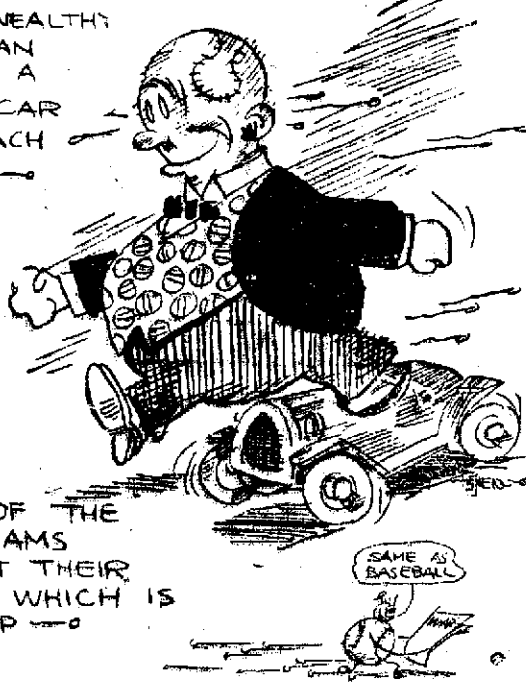

The outlook for the oat crop also has improved since July 1 and it is believed that, with favorable conditions, even the great record crop of 1912 will be exceeded. The present promise is nearly a billion and a half bushels, more than a quarter of a billion bushels greater than the crop of last year and but 16,000,000 below the highest record. Potatoes promise 431,000,000 bushels, 25,000,000 bushels more than last year, and 11,000,000 more than the yield in the great record year of 1912.

A heavy crop is reported from some of the wheat producing sections of Europe, but food production in that part of the world this year will be necessarily reduced and the demand for American food products can not fail to be unprecedented. This demand may lead to an unwelcome increase in prices at home, but the bringing of millions of dollars into this country in payment for exported food products will indirectly benefit our people generally.

The certainty of meeting Europe's needs as well as our own by means of vast American corn yields is an interesting reminder of how nature comes to the aid of man in times of stress. The fear of the failure of the world's food supply has often been expressed, but nature has never really been found wanting in the past and there is no good reason to expect disastrous shortage in the future. Nature is rich in undeveloped resources as well as in the fruits we have already learned to garner, and this inexhaustible productive earth of ours can be made to sustain many times the number of its present inhabitants. Local disturbances and temporary scarcity at points are inevitable, but with increasing intelligence and unabated industry, aided by developed methods of distribution, the generous soil of a world as yet only partly under cultivation can never fail to produce food in sufficient abundance.

Today's Geographic Study of The Great European War Zone

Vilna is one of the most important immediate objectives of the Teutonic drives in Russia, for its capture and retention by the Germans would not only threaten the communication of the Tsar's armies but would also cripple the second line of Russian defense, along the Dug, or the Brest-Litovsk line. The holding of Vilna would practically cut the northern communications of the powerful fortress and military entrepot upon the Bug, and bring with it a more startling change in the eastern campaign than even the capture of Warsaw. A description of this important railway, trading and manufacturing city is given in a statement on war geography issued today by the National Geographic Society. It reads:

"Vilna is a city of 170,000, an industrial and trade center situated in the midst of a region of tangled forests, almost impassable marshes, and low-lying lakes, at the intersection of the railways from Warsaw to Petrograd and from Libau, the Baltic port, to Rostof, at the mouth of the Don. It lies nearly mid-way between the cities of Grodno and Dvinsk, two other points upon the Warsaw-Petrograd Railway threatened by the German invaders. Petrograd lies 435 miles away to the north-northwest of Vilna, and the country in between is a labyrinth of lake, morass, woodland and wet meadowland. It is more than 110 miles from the German frontier, toward which it is guarded by the fortress of Kovno in the northwest.

"The city is an ancient one, of which fact its appearance bears every testimony, for its irregular ground-plan straggles among, around and over the knot of low hills upon which the city is built in accordance with the traditional silliness of the Middle Ages. Its streets are narrow, and not especially well-kept. It wears, however, a general air of comfortable prosperity; for Vilna sends large quantities of goods to the Black Sea and to the Baltic. It handles a very extensive business in grains and timber, articles which it exported before the present war in great quantities to Germany, to Holland, and to England. It also has important textile and leather industries. Vilna manufactures considerable tobacco, knit goods, clothing, artificial flowers and gloves.

"The old town is rich in memories. A mass of ruins that were once a brilliant castle of the Jagellons is here. Vilna was probably founded in the early part of the 10th century, but is first mentioned as the chief fortified town of the Lithuanians in 1128. It was the nucleus about which the great Lithuanian power grew, and a capital in which the ancient religious service was continued until the end of the 14th century. The God Perkunas housed here in a splendid temple and protected his people in their swamp and woodland until destroyed ruthlessly in 1387 by Prince Jagiello, after his conversion and baptism.

"Wars, plague and destructive fires have played havoc with the city's prosperity and growth. It was nearly ruined altogether in the 17th century, during the struggle between Russia and Poland. Russia finally took possession of the city in 1795, after Poland's partition. The Poles of Vilna aided the uprisings against their Russian overlords in 1831 and in 1863, and bitter punishment was administered for this by the Tsar's government. The native Russian element in the city is small. It is estimated that more than 50 per cent of the population is Jewish, while the Lithuanians and Poles make up the greatest part of the remainder."

The express companies, which have been handling the traffic more than a quarter of a century, with one nearly a half million a year, in making the change the government expects to eliminate many delays in addition to effecting a great economy.

Expert Advice For the Automobile Owner

Queries and Replies Covering Matters of Importance to the Man Who Runs a Car

Will you please advise me the best method of sinking a galvanized iron drum for the purpose of underground storage of gasoline?

The best method of sinking a galvanized iron drum for the purpose of underground storage of gasoline is to dig the well in which the tank is to be sunk with some hard material, such as brick or concrete, that will not sink unequally afterward and put strain upon the tank connections. There are many methods suggested by different companies in this business. One company states that the best method of sinking such a drum, both as regards the life of the drum and cheapness, is to paint the tank thoroughly with a good asphaltum paint or smear thoroughly with tar. After the hole for the tank is made put in this either a tanned paper or burlap, smearing the tank thoroughly with asphaltum or tar and then folding it over the burlap or tanned paper. The asphaltum or tar is again daubed over the tank after this is done, after which the ground is filled in, and, according to the estimate of this company, the tank should be good for fifty or a hundred years.

What is a good way to eliminate squeaking springs?

Wipe graphite introduced between the leaves of the springs kills the

squeak and seems to last indefinitely. The reason for its success is that it clings to the surface of the leaves and puts a veneer of graphite all over them. This prevents metal to metal contact.

The way to apply the lubricant is as follows: Jack up the car so that all weight is off the springs and spread the leaves apart with a screwdriver. Now dust the leaves as thoroughly as possible with fake graphite, using a feather. You will find when you come to drive your car, even over the roughest roads, that spring squeaking has all disappeared.

Is it practicable to use shellac on rims to prevent rusting?

If you painted your rims with shellac you would find that it peels off in a short time. For this purpose graphite paint or even ordinary paint would be much more satisfactory.

How can I retain the glossy finish on the body of my car?

Wash the body with slightly warm water and when dry give well rubbed in application of liquid veneer with cheesecloth. As a result the body retains its gloss, although run practically every day in the year and in all kinds of weather.

WEDDING OF THE GERMAN CHANCELLOR'S DAUGHTER

Had it not been for the war which is engaging the German nation, the wedding of Fraulein Isa Von Bethmann-Hollweg, the daughter of the German Imperial Chancellor, to Count Von Zech-Burkersrode, would have been a grand court fete with all its attending pomp and ceremony. But in keeping with the serious affairs of the nation, the ceremony was marked by its simplicity. The photograph shows part of the crowd of women who stood behind the flower girls watching the German Chancellor's daughter walking down the flower strewn road with his daughter by his side. In the happiness of the moment, the grizzled old veterans forgot everything else but the big event, the wedding of his daughter to the man of her choice.

Industrial Paralysis and General Domestic Upheaval Everted by "Business Manager" of British Nation—Charged Lack of Patriotism Shown Not to be True.

BY ED. L. KEEN
(United Press Staff Correspondent)
London, August 2 (by mail).—Providence takes care of drunken men, babies, and—England.

According to some irreverent folks this amended version of the old adage is quite justified, especially in view of the timely settlement of the recent coal strike.

Anyhow, it is conceded on all hands over here that John Bull seldom did a more thorough job of "muddling through"—likewise is it admitted that in this particular instance Providence was materially assisted by one David Lloyd George, the new "business manager of the British Empire."

The censorship muddle, the recruiting muddle, the Dardanelles muddle, the shells muddle, the machine-gun muddle, the cabinet muddle, and all the other muddles, big and little in which Great Britain has been involved since the great war began—none of them contained such possibilities of widespread disaster as the coal strike muddle. Not only was England face to face with industrial paralysis and general domestic disorder, if not revolution; but she had already been unofficially reproved by her allies, who recently had been none too enthusiastic anyhow over the support she had been giving them on the battlefield. The great manufacturing establishments had begun to feel the pinch; a number of the coal-carrying roads had closed down; the admiralty had grabbed all the available coal supply of the South Wales docks; the increased flow of munitions which Lloyd George had just gotten well started was gravely jeopardized, and—perhaps more portentous than anything else—half a dozen French ships were lying in Cardiff harbor with empty bunkers.

For three months the situation had been developing. If John Bull had merely glanced in that direction he would have seen it; but John probably figured that he had quite enough trouble in stock without frisking the future for more. Hunting for trouble never was one of John's long suits.

The five year agreement of the South Wales Miners' federation with the Coal Owners' association was due to expire June 30. The men had given the required three months' notice that they desired a new deal. The masters refused to listen. The deadlock continued. And it was not until three days before the date of expiration of the old agreement that Walter Runciman, president of the government board of trade, whose most important duty is to prevent strikes if possible, intervened. Even he did not go South Wales to investigate conditions on the spot, or by personal influence among the men and masters to avert the disaster that was hanging in the air.

He had the miners' and masters' representatives practically in his hands when they realized the determination of the government to frame an award which conceded most of the men's demands. But whereas this was satisfactory to the federation and file. After keeping the men at work on day-to-day contracts for a fortnight, the leaders could go no further, and the strike was on.

Now, there has been a whole lot said about lack of patriotism on the part of the miners; but very little about the masters. The real reason for this strike was the question of war profits. With the cost of living increased by from 50 to 60 per cent, the miners felt that they were entitled to share in the enormous profits accruing to the coal owners by reason of the war. But even at that, when the trouble first started, the men said to the masters, in effect: "If you will sell coal at the old prices, we will go on working at the old wage. But if it is your purpose to make money out of the war, we see no reason why we should not share this profit with you. We object to having our patriotism capitalized for your benefit. Is it patriotic to go on increasing the price of coal, not only to our own people but also to our allies?"

Regardless of whether the miners were right or wrong in their attitude there is no question but what the owners had taken advantage of the war to line their pockets. Coal prices in London last winter averaged $2.25 per ton above normal; and the cheaper grades—which most of poor people buy—were in some instances as much as $2.75 higher than normally. Against this, place the fact that the miners' original demands in their entirety amounted to an increase of only 9 cents a ton on cost of production!

In answer to the charge of want of patriotism on their part the miners point out that nearly 100,000 men have been sent to the war from South Wales—56,000 from one county alone. President Winston of Miners' federation has a son in the army; Treasurer Onions' eldest son was recently killed in action, and he has two other sons serving; three of Secretary Richards' sons are in the trenches; Executive Committee member Gill is a lieutenant in the army, and Watts Morgan, one of the most influential leaders in the district, is captain of a troop of Rhonda ex-miners.

The strike would still be on today—or there would have been nationalization of the mines—were it not for Lloyd George. When the minister of munitions went to South Wales he carried concealed weapons, but he didn't have to use them. His marvelous personal magnetism won the day with his fellow countrymen. It was some job, and it is exceedingly doubtful if any other man in England could have accomplished the result so satisfactorily, especially in view of the fierce resentment that had been aroused through the hasty application of the penalty clauses of the munitions act to the district. That the men got nearly all they asked for was due to Lloyd George's appreciation of the justice of their claim to a fair share of the war profits of the masters.

PANAMA CANAL ONE YEAR OLD

Washington, D. C., Aug. 16.—The Panama Canal today enters upon its second year of operation. The first steamship passed through the canal August 15, 1914, only a week or ten days after the beginning of the general war in Europe. During the twelve months that the canal has been in service the commerce of the world has been totally demoralized by the war. This has made it impossible to form a true estimate of the value of the great inter-oceanic waterway under normal conditions. It is gratifying to note, however, that even under the present unfavorable conditions the revenue of the canal covered the operating expenses. The canal's trade has stimulated the back of the world's commerce. With the increase of trans-oceanic commerce that will come with the restoration of world peace, and with continued efficiency in the operation of the canal, it is confidently predicted in official circles here that the great waterway will fulfill the early expectations in some particulars.

GOVERNOR'S CONGRESS ATTRACTS EXECUTIVES (By United Press)

Boston, August 15.—With one week remaining before the opening of the eighth annual Governor's conference, Governor David I. Walsh is busy arranging the last details for the entertainment of what is expected to be the largest gathering of chief executives since their first meeting in Washington D. C., in 1908 on the invitation of President Roosevelt. Already more than twenty-five Governors and a dozen former Governors have acknowledged Governor Walsh's personal invitations with assurances that they will be present at the Bay State capital for the four days set aside for the conference.

The officers of the organization are Governor Walsh, Governor Spry, of Utah and Governor Hall, of Louisiana, executive committee; former Governor John Franklin Fort, of Newark, New Jersey, treasurer; and Miss C. Riley, Madison Wis., secretary.

The purpose of the Governors' conference as laid down in the articles of organization, is to bring the governors of the different states together "yearly" for an exchange of views and experience on subjects of general importance to the people of the several states, the promotion of greater uniformity in state legislation and the attainment of greater efficiency in administration.

Not all the governors who are to address the conference have as yet announced their topics, but it is known that Governor Carlson, of Colorado, will speak on the "State or National Control of Water Power Sites"; Governor Hammond, of Minnesota, on "Economy and Efficiency in the State"; Governor Fielder, New Jersey, on "What Would be the States' Duty in the Matter of National Defense"; Governor Williams, of Oklahoma, on "The Function of the Executive Department Relative to the Budget"; Governor Stuart, of Virginia, on "Taxation"; Ex-Governor Ammon, of Colorado, on "The Development of the West"; Ex-Governor Dix, of New York, on "Conservation of Man and Natural Resources"; and Ex-Governor Bleas, of South Carolina, on "The Duty and Responsibility of the Chief Executive in Dealing with Prisoners."

40,000 OF G. A. R. WILL BE REVIEWED BY THE PRESIDENT

Will Be Symbol of Grand Review of Victorious Veteran After Close of the War

All Arrangements for Entertaining of Large Numbers at Washington Have Been Perfected—National Chief Bosley Makes Plans for the Affair.

Washington, Aug. 16.—In the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the Grand Review which is one of the principal features of the forthcoming annual encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic to be held in Washington, September 27-October 3, forty thousand marchers will pass in line before the president of the United States and his cabinet. This was the announcement made today by Col. George A. Bosley, of Boston, the national chief of staff, who is here making arrangements for the event.

The Grand Review of the victorious veterans of the civil war which occurred in Washington immediately following the close of the great struggle was one of the most spectacular military incidents in the history of the world. It was the most impressive pageant which ever occurred in warfare up to that time, and elaborate preparations have been made by the old soldiers to commemorate it at their coming encampment. The line of march will be from the Capitol to the White House along historic Pennsylvania avenue which today presents a vastly different appearance from what it was a half century ago when the returning warriors passed in grand review before President Johnson, his cabinet and the general staff of the army. It will rival any inaugural parade which the city has ever witnessed.

The greater portion of the marchers will be veterans of the blue, most of whom participated in the march fifty years ago, but it will also include those who belonged to various army corps which did take part in the concluding event of the civil war. Augmenting the veterans will be the Sons of Veterans and kindred organizations as well as troops from the regular army, members of the Marine Corps, sailors from battleships, cadets and independent military bodies as well as civilian escorts.

Washington citizens have perfected all arrangements for entertaining and housing the large number of veterans and their families as well as the great number of visitors who are coming here to participate in or witness the event.

CLEARFIELD BOYS CAMP AT BIGLER'S

Enjoying Themselves at Ideal Place in Mountain Forests

The Clearfield boys who went camping at Bigler's near Bellefonte, instead of spending their vacation on the beach at Atlantic City, Saturday have had a very delightful time so far. The first night was spent in regular camp style with pillow fights and other things that add to keeping the camp in an uproar.

The site of the camp is ideal for such an outing as cottages have been built for campers which eliminate the trouble of carrying tents, and all the campers need is necessary food clothing and grocery supplies. The scenery of the place also adds to the pleasure of the place for campers as it is situated in the mountains of a lime stone region with large evergreen forests and ideal streams for fishing and swimming.

URGES STUDENTS INTO MINNESOTA FIELDS

(By United Press) St. Paul, Aug. 16.—Transportation of thousands of men to harvest the Northwest's bumper crops is looming up as a serious problem to the farmers of the Northwest states. In Canada, the situation was relieved by railroads offering free transportation. The anti-pass law and the fact that many laborers were concentrated in the cities during the spring, because there was little railroad work done through country districts, added to the difficulties of farmers.

Corn was slightly damaged by the recent rains but other than that crop there has been a universal improvement in the Northwest crops, over last year's condition. There is in prime condition, and will begin to move about September 1. Max, in fair condition is beginning to move today. Dean Woods of the Minnesota agricultural school, urges that at least two-thirds of the college students go to the harvest fields this year.

The Broken Coin

A Story of Mystery and Adventure
By EMERSON HOUGH
From the Scenario by GRACE CUNARD

SYNOPSIS.

Kitty Gray, newspaper woman, finds a broken coin in a shop which she is investigating. She is curious and leads her, at the order of her managing editor, to go to the principal of the shop to place out the story suggested by the inscription. She is followed, and on arrival in Graceland her adventures while chasing the secret of the broken coin begin.

SEVENTH INSTALLMENT

CHAPTER XXV.

Divided.

As Kitty approached the little room of the count's palace—which before now had proved to be something of a storm center in the affairs of the Graceland—there came to her the conviction that there might be here beside herself who would have some inkling as to the whereabouts of the missing portion of the coin, and who might therefore arrive upon the scene at much the same time as that of her own visit. She was not altogether surprised at the sudden interruption of her labors, just at the moment of her success.

As she saw herself the object of a pointed weapon, she swerved aside instinctively—called out instinctively for help.

"Roulet!" she exclaimed, for, womanlike, she had learned the value of a strong man's arm, and her first thought was of the faithful servant who so strangely had attached himself to her own varying fortunes. And Roulet came hastening from his watching place outside the door.

He saw the little room occupied by a man—who now suddenly had entered—and who threatened Kitty, so that, to save her life as she supposed, she was on the point of surrendering to him both pieces of the coin. The sight of his mistress in danger was enough for Roulet. With his customary battle cry he plunged immediately into the conflict, careless of the threatening weapon. In the melee the two half coins both were dropped upon the floor.

Even now the ruling impulse of Kitty did not quite forsake her. She stopped and regained one of the half coins, but the struggling men, shifting here and there in the room, kept her from securing the other. In the blind instinct for escape she fled now to the open hall, taking that direction which led back from the front of the building.

Roulet heard her pass, and could not join her in flight—but he heard her give a cry of alarm whose cause he could only guess. His energies were fully occupied by the combat with this stranger—whom now he saw to be one of Count Sackio's men. He had noted him at the hunting lodge. He himself had not time to reason as to the presence of this new factor in the general imbroglio, but at last, able to bring his own weapons into play, he stayed the issue for a time. They both had time to recognize one another as they stood, the one as much baffled as the other, and neither quite comprehending what the other was doing here.

Very naturally the sounds of all this confusion could not be concealed. The scream of a woman had rung widely through the halls, and used as they were to extraordinary circumstances heretofore, the servants could not fail to investigate the cause of this. They hastened in the direction of the uproar but their advance was stayed by the command of the master of the palace himself.

The men in the room, as they paused for breathing space, heard a faint sound advancing to the door, heard the calm voice of Count Frederick himself.

"Gentlemen!" The intruders, whatever the errand of each, took their eyes from one another and turned now, recognizing yet another man who scarce had come in friendship.

"You have me greatly surprised," said Count Frederick, with the usual coolness before an extraordinary situation. "But might I ask why you came thus to disarrange my apartment? Had I known your own curiosity regarding it, I might have asked some of my servants to assist you in a search more orderly."

"I was sent back by my master," began the stranger—who was none other than Bartel, the late successor to Roulet in Count Sackio's good graces. "He had left certain of his belongings—some silver cases of the toilet, Monsieur le Comte—he did not trouble to ask you about them, and now he sent me."

"Indeed! That is most plausible! But why seek for them in my rooms, when his quarters were in quite another part of the palace, my dear sir?"

"As to that," replied the other with calm frontality, "I cannot say. I only came here because the servants told me that this was the room. Of course, if there has been any mistake—"

"Cease, I say," exclaimed Count Frederick, frowning now, his face flashing.

He turned from Roulet to the other intruder in his apartments. Roulet stood dumb. The other shook his head.

"Monsieur le Comte," said he, "the young woman was here when I entered—when this man also entered. She passed yonder—when she had the opportunity—and took with her one half the coin. There lies the other on your floor. She disappeared—we heard a cry."

Count Frederick stooped and picked up the object pointed out to him. It was his own half of the coin—or that which he had called his own—since he had taken it from her.

So then, he reflected, she had found the way to his most secret hiding place—she was on the very point of success when this last contretemps had interfered with her plans. A new feeling of admiration for her keenness and persistence once more came to Count Frederick's heart. For a moment he stood regarding half-regretfully the bit of metal in his hand.

"I shall not offer this trinket to you, my friend," said he grimly to the man Bartel, as he pocketed the coin, "for of course you were not looking for coins—only toilet articles—silver ones, did you say, sir? You shall take an excellent set of my own to Count Sackio, with my compliments. Tell him that it would seem ill to me that any guest of mine should suffer risk of loss either to his person or his property while he was beneath my roof."

With these stinging words, which brought color to the other's face, Count Frederick turned coolly away, and once more faced Roulet. That was in his face now which did not speak remorselessness, revengefulness. No, something softer lay in the man's cool gray eyes.

ARMY OF TEACHERS INVADERS OAKLAND.

(By United Press)

Oakland, Cal., Aug. 16.—In her gayest holiday dress, Oakland today began the entertainment of the fifty thousand or more school teachers, who have assembled here for the fifty-third annual convention of the National Education Association. The gathering gives promise of being the most profitable as well as the largest of its kind ever held in this country. For the first time in the history of the association's conventions, representation is not confined to the United States. Delegates from many foreign countries will have part in the deliberations. It was the early intention to make it a world congress on education, but the war made this difficult. Of the international character of the convention, however, there can be no doubt. All the belligerent nations are represented, though the delegations from Europe are not so large as would have been the case in time of peace.

The sessions of the association and its numerous affiliated organizations and departments will continue weeks. The general assembly, held in Oakland's new $2,500,000 municipal auditorium, which has a seating capacity of more than 10,000, is the theatre and assembly hall under the same roof. It is used as the meeting place for various departments. The calls for the discussion of national activity. A total of 1,000 speakers will be heard among them will be the foremost educators of the country.
